At this meeting, President Wycoff suggested that the Society should be disbanded. His rationale was that the Society had been formed as an association of people involved in the development of the electron microscope, and he felt that by this time the interest was more in applications than instrument development. Eventually, this change was reflected in a name change. In 1964 the Society changed its name from Electron Microscope Society to Electron Microscopy Society. A major source of strength of the Society has been the cross-discipline nature of the applications of microscopy.
